I find it so crazy 2016 was ten years ago (as of writing this). So much has changed in the past decade, and despite my flop game LIFE being shelved after a short-lived beta release in 2019, I am writing liner notes for its soundtrack album! LIFE was supposed to be a simple side-scroller game with a coming of age theme in a world where its people are various kinds of shapes. When I first shared the idea of LIFE in 2016, I had no prior coding experience or design experience for that matter. During the four years I spent trying to make this game, I learned so many things and met so many different kinds of people, most of whom are now long-time friends. I'd say my life would be very different had I not made the attempt to make LIFE, even if it never did get completion it deserved.

One 'successful' thing from the LIFE project though was the soundtrack, which was initially released in 2017. It was my first 'foray' into music, something I did not revisit until 2020. This album would not be where it is without the contributions from Isaac, who created nine of the tracks featured on the album. So, my first shoutout goes to Isaac, thank you for your hard work and time contributing to the soundtrack! I am forever grateful even to this day to have featured your creations in the game and on the soundtrack. I also want to shoutout Sunsetly (Tyler), thank you for your concept art and for coming up for track titles for songs such as "Urban Groove". Ceo_, thank you for your art and concept designs for this project, especially for the iconic clouds and mountains featured in almost all LIFE-related art. I also appreciate your code contributions for the game itself. Next shoutout to herronjo (Josh), I always appreciate how invested you were (and still are) regarding the world of LIFE. Your tips on code for the game and additional help still means so much to me ten years later, and I always enjoy seeing your fan-art of LIFE. Speaking of fan art, I also want to shoutout Bunnbuns (Sophie), I still find it hilarious that you had commissioned someone to make art of the characters from LIFE. I am also thankful for your backing during the development of LIFE. I am so elated to have this album released under the record label we co-founded with Josh.

For those not mentioned, I am thankful for your support and having to deal with years of "LIFE this" and "LIFE that". Seriously, I am so grateful for your patience despite the game being a total failure. I hope you all enjoy the soundtrack album and can envision what the world of LIFE was to be!
